Davison	Simon	-	Guardsman	1st	-	3-May-2007	22	Unknown	Guardsman Simon Davison was shot dead at a checkpoint in southern Afghanistan after the post came under attack near Garmsir, in Helmand Province. Guardsman Davison was born in Newcastle and then educated in Cannock and Stafford. He worked as a carpenter before joining the Army in 2005. Less than a year later, he was posted to the Grenadier Guards. He leaves behind his mother Maureen Hindmarch, father Ray Davison and sister, Caroline. His death takes the number of British troops killed in the country since 2001, to 54.
His company officer, Major Will Mace, described him as "a soldier of the highest calibre". "It is a tribute to his professionalism and strong character that he fell while performing his duties and protecting his friends." A friend and fellow soldier, Guardsman Alan Davies, added: "He was a gentleman in every way and could always be relied upon to make people laugh." His commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel Carew Hatherley, said Guardsman Davison had always wanted to be a soldier and was "immensely proud" of his uniform. "Reliable and trustworthy are the two words most used when his colleagues describe him. He died fighting to protect other Grenadiers and gave his life in doing so," he said. "There is a no more selfless act a soldier can perform."

Downes	Neil	-	Guardsman	1st	-	9-Jun-2007	20	Unknown	Guardsman Downes from Manchester, who was known as Tony, was from the 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards. He had been on patrol with the Afghan National Army when his vehicle was caught in an explosion near Sangin, Afghanistan. Taliban fighters then attacked the patrol with rocket-propelled grenades (RPGs) and small arms until British reinforcements arrived. The reinforcements were on their way to help an Afghan army patrol that had been ambushed when they were attacked at 11.10 local time (07.40 BST). They fought off the Taliban until reinforcements arrived, at which point the soldiers were rescued and returned to base, the MoD said.
Gdsm Downes had already completed one tour in Iraq with Inkerman Company, 1st Battalion, Grenadier Guards in 2006. He became the 60th member of the British armed forces to die in Afghanistan since conflict began in November 2001. His commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel Carew Hatherley, said Gdsm Downes was a "resolute and steadfast friend to all who knew him". "Over the previous 12 weeks he had fought alongside his fellow Grenadiers and the Afghan National Army soldiers against the Taliban, never once flinching from his duty. "He gave his life in selfless service to his country and he will be greatly missed, and never forgotten." Gdsm Downes, who had 16 GCSEs, acted as an intelligence rep for the Inkerman Company. Major Marcus JG Elliot-Square, said: "He had developed such a depth of understanding about the areas in which we worked, the company was always well prepared. Consummately professional in everything he did, he never stopped gathering vital intelligence. His family and girlfriend have our deepest sympathies and our thoughts will be with them always". Gdsm Mike Piantkiwskj said: "He would want to be remembered as a professional soldier, and as a friend to all who knew him".
